A university with a strong internationalisation strategy will rise through the global league tables, increase their student engagement, improve research collaboration and attract talented staff to their campuses.

But, how do you create a robust internationalisation strategy, based on models and theory with staff buy-in? The Leadership Foundation for Higher Education has launched a brand new programme; the Global Leadership Programme which will address these challenges.

The Global Leadership Programme will:

- Explore proven models of internationalisation
- Examine opportunities for growing university business transnationally
- Allow you to take part in a 360-degree feedback and coaching, using our newly developed Global Higher Education Leadership diagnostic tool
- Introduce the higher education Global Balanced Scorecard, specifically developed and exclusively available on the Global Leadership Programme
- Allow you to hear from senior leaders from around the world who are responsible for internationalisation
- Create an international network of peers
- Allow time for your own business development as part of the residential sessions

Applicants should be the lead for internationalisation within their institution.
