
Evaluation of serum hepcidin concentration in children with acute leukemia

Sheren Elsayed Shaheen ;

Acute leukemia is a malignant disease which is characterized by disordered differentiation of either lymphopoietic stem cells (acute lymphoblastic leukemia), or hemopoietic stem cells (acute myeloid leukemia). The leukemias are the most common malignant neoplasms in childhood, accounting for about 41% of all malignancies that occur in children